Poems

I'm rushing poems
In the Bubble of Dreams

sometimes they have a taste dry bitter
Sometimes it works out for me
Sweet Honey

I spend time with them
Like with a bittersweet girl
A girl just right

Man

A man is a man
Let's not demonize it Let's not embellish
these are not hallucinations
A man is a man

A thought ventures out into thicker and thicker thickets until it hits the stones let's let her run
to make it disappear

The Family of Hidden Normality

Once upon a time there was a family,
A family of normality Hidden.
There was peace in the house,
No one cried or thought
How good it is for them.
All disputes were resolved by Vote.
The second family, in which There was no order,
Have they dreamed of Vote

Senses

Will you see a bullet fired?
the smallest particle?
The whole moon?
The world on the other side?
thought? odour? sound?
No?
It's a pity

White doves

Crocodiles jumped on me
When I smoked the pipe of peace like an Indian and a fakir in one

They wanted to snatch the blunt and snatched

they have become doves of peace eulogists of the end of the war

About author:

Artur Chabrowski - born in Bystrzyca Kłodzka, Poland, in 1985, now he lives in the city of Kłodzko. He is interested in esotericism, and has been writing prose and poetry since the age of 16. He published nine books in Poland. He writes prose in the fantasy style, and recently published a textbook on esotericism. He suffers from schizophrenia and went through quite difficult years, the so-called "dark night of the soul", to finally develop spiritually and in writing as a newborn.
